INDEX

TO THE

HUNDRED AND TWENTY-THIRD VOLUME

OF THE

North American Review.

Arnold, Wilhelm, his Ansiedelungen und Wanderungen deutscher Stämme, critical notice of, 151–156.

Astronomical Progress, Recent, article on, 86–112 — powers and limitations of the spectroscope, 87 — how little we know of the surface of the sun, 89 — stability of form and position of the photosphere, 90 — chromosphere and its protuberances, 90, 91 — the corona, its irregular shape, passage of comets through it, its probable character, 91 — vast scale of operations on outside and inside of sun, 93, 94 — great advantages in this country for solar observation, 95 — well-equipped men for the work, 96 — small cost, 97 — sun's heat limited, 97 — enough to last only about twenty million years more, 99 — motions of the heaving bodies not mathematically determinable, 101 — deviations from their supposed motions, by Saturn and Mercury, how caused, 102 — moon's motions most difficult to calculate precisely, 103–107 — Hansen's theories and computations, 104, 105 — increased accuracy of observations, 107 — determining sun's distance by transits of Venus, 107–112 — the "black drop," 109 — ingenious explanation by Mr. E. J. Stone, 110.

Boston, The proposed Charter for the City of, article on, 1–25 — centralized executive power not so dangerous as legislative, 2 — absorption of power by Congress, 3 — interest of politicians in multiplied elections and distribution of power, 4 — difficulty of reforming through bodies most opposed to reform, 6 — inefficiency of Boston city government, shown by fire of 1873, 8 — general medley of authorities, 9 — little power of Mayor, 10 — irresponsible financial administration, 11 — leading features of the proposed charter, 13 — weak points, 13, 14 — government by commissions, 14–16 — absolute need of definite personal responsibility, 18 — sketch of a charter, 19 — some arguments in its favor, 20–25.

Forster, John, his Life of Jonathan Swift, critical notice of, 170–175.

Gengler, Heinrich Gottfried, his Germanische Rechtsdenkmäler, Leges, Capitularia, Formulæ, critical notice of, 247, 248.

Guizot, M., his Histoire de la France, critical notice of, 145–151.

Hamilton, Alexander, article on, 113–144 — difficulty of writing a satisfactory biography, 114 — defects of Morse's life of Hamilton, 115 — Hamilton's precocity, 116 — his quarrel with Washington shows his remarkable influence, 117 — bent of his mind not military, 118 — great success and excellence as a lawyer, 119 — compared with Chief Justice Marshall, 120 — in the Constitutional Convention the "Federalist," 121 — great triumph in New York Convention, 121, 122 — Hamilton's financial policy, 123–129 — wretched condition of the country after the Revolution, 123 — Washington's Cabinet, 124 — Hamilton's first Report, 125 — bargain between him and Jefferson by which his plan was adopted, 128 — character of opposition, 129 — quarrel between Hamilton and Jefferson, 130 — the downfall of the Federal party, 130–137 — its many able men, 131 — discords between John Adams and Hamilton, 131–137 — Adams's want of tact, 132 — his error in appointment of generals, 133 — Hamilton's support of Alien and Sedition Acts, 135 — his attack on Adams, 136 — the Federal party shattered, 136 — its great achievements, 136 — Hamilton's defeat of Burr, 137 — his great qualities as a writer, and his defects, 138 — his belief in the English form of government, 139 — Gouverneur Morris's statement, 139–141 — his distrust, but hearty support, of the Constitution, 141 — belief in State rights, 142 — his political integrity, 143 — two instances of bad faith, 143 — general summary of his character, 144.

Hospital Plans, critical notice of, 233–238.

Hawthorne, a study of, critical notice of, 478–480.

"Independents" in the Canvass, The, 426–467 — purpose of the Republican party, 426 — the Democratic party, 427, 428 — the Fifth Avenue Conference, 429–431 — the formalities of the campaign and its issue, 432–442 — the letters of Nomination from the two candidates considered, 442–459 — the Independent reform and its platform, 460–466 — the new President committed to reform in any case, 467.

Italian Popular Tales, article on, 25–60 — the "Piacevoli Notti," by Straparola, 27 — the Pentamerone, 28 — Pitre's collection of Traditions, 31 — various names applied to popular tales, 33 — "Tridicime," 34 — variation of the legend of Cupid and Psyche, 37 — influence of the Orient very perceptible, 39–42 — "Tales of a Parrot," 42–44 — Vineyard story, 45 — stories of Peter and his Lord, 46 — Peter's mother and sisters, 48 — the "Baker's Apprentice," 50 — "Bonhomme Misère," 51 — "Beppo Pipetta," 52 — the "Leggenda Fantastiche," 54 — Giufa and his stupidity, 56 — stories of Firrazzanu, the practical joker, 57 — origin and diffusion of popular tales, 58–60.

Langel, Auguste, his Grandes Figures Historiques, critical notice of, 156–160.

Lindner, Theodor, his Geschichte des deutschen Reiches, critical notice of, 165–170.

Mound-Builders, Houses of the, article on, 60–85 — assumed that the mound-builders were American Indians, 61 — communal or joint-tenement houses were used by Indians in the middle status of barbarism, 62–67 — the earthworks used for bases of their houses, which were also their fortresses, 67–84 — size of Indian villages, 68 — elevated platforms of earth as house-sites found in Yucatan and Central America, 71 — remains of villages in the valley of the Scioto, 72 — ground-plan of High Bank works, 73 — conjectural restoration of them, 77 — materials and mode of construction, 79 — probable numbers of the mound-builders, 84 — removal from Ohio valley probably voluntary, 85.

Müller, F. Max, his Chips from a German Workshop, Vol. IV., critical notice of, 193–210.

Municipal Government, An episode in, the shattering of the Ring, 362–417 — position of the Tammany Ring in 1871, 362, 363 — failure of the exposure in the "Times" to arrest attention, 364 — Mayor Hall and other members of the Ring on the defence, 365–368 — the excitement in New York, 369–371 — the other newspapers side with the Ring, 372, 373 — the approach of a climax, 374 — all parties greatly excited, 375–379 — Mr. Green as comptroller, 380 — difficulty to obtain proofs of frauds, 381–383 — the Ring in the Democratic Convention, 384, 385 — signs of returning confidence and strength in the Ring, 386 — the election, its effect upon the Ring, 387–393 — the position of Tweed, 394–398 — the impeachment of the Ring judges by the legislature, 399 — Judge Barnard, 400–405 — the cleansing of the New York bench, 406 — the trial of the members of the Ring who did not escape, 407–417 — changes since the Ring was broken, 418–425.

Paul, C. Kegan, his William Godwin, critical notice of, 221–233.

Ring, The Whiskey, article on, 280–327 — the story to be told, 281 — Mr. Bristow's part in the reorganization of the public service, 281 — how the movement upon the St. Louis Whiskey Ring began, 282–284 the removal of the chief and the principal members of the secret service force, 285 — Cabinet intriguing, 287 — how Mr. Bristow's movement begun, 288 — Mr. Colony's part in it, 289–292 — the Ring watching Mr. Colony's movements, 293 — the progress of the work, 294 — the seizing parties and their operations, 295–299 — the treasury active, 300–302 — the Secretary's caution, 302 — the work of experts, 303 — efforts to discover the guilty and obtain their indictments, 304–306 — schemes to crush the Secretary, 307–308 — the military court and the Attorney-General's action, 309–310 — the circular letter, 311–313 — why General Henderson was removed, 314 — the character of the agencies employed by the ring shown by the statements of the operations of the detectives, 315, 316 — the course of Cabinet officers, 317 — effect of the whiskey war upon General Bristow's nomination at Cincinnati, 318–321 — the result to the government, 322 — results of Secretary Bristow's work, 322–327.

Roger Williams, as to, his banishment from the Massachusetts Plantation, critical notice of, 474 — 477.

Salter, William, his Life of James W. Grimes, critical notice of, 186–193.

Southern Question, The. — Article on, 249–280 — a sectional question to be met in the life of the United States, 250 — the theory of State rights, 252 — difficult questions before the Republican party in 1865, 253, 254 — the condition of the South, 255, 256 — peculiarity of Mr. Johnson's position as President, 257 — Mr. Lamar and General Garfield, 258 — Mr. Lamar's views on the Southern question, 259–264 — his conclusions from these views, 265, 266 — Mr. Garfield's reply, 267 — the Mississippi report the solution proposed by the party in power, 269–272 — the advantage of the solution proposed by Mr. Lamar, 273 — the Southern feeling not disloyal, 274, 275 — points in the whole question which need to be treated, and the real needs of the South, 276–280.

Stedman, E. C., his Victorian Poets, critical notice of, 216 - 221.
Stubbs, William, his Constitutional History of England, critical notice of, 161 - 165.
Swinburne, A. C., his Essays and Studies, critical notice of, 216 - 221.
Ticknor, George, Life, Letters, and Journals of, critical notice of, 210 - 215.
Transcendentalism in New England, critical notice of, 468 - 474.
United States, History of the, Von Holst's, 228 - 361 — criticisms of the work, 328 - 338 — extracts from Von Holst's history, 339 - 351 — answers to his strictures on the Constitution, 352 - 354 — objection to his criticism on the war of 1812, 355 - 358 — his remarks upon the political influence of the slave power objected to, 359 - 361.
Van Horne, Thomas B., his History of the Army of the Cumberland, critical notice of, 238 - 246.
Wells, Charles, his Joseph and his Brethren, with introduction by A. C. Swinburne, critical notice of, 176 - 186.

Cambridge: Printed by Welch, Bigelow, & Co.